Refugee Support Services

Every year, more than 600 refugees arrive in the Charlotte area. They receive government assistance for the first 90 days, and then they are on their own. That is where Refugee Support Services steps in. The agency works to connect local volunteers and refugees in reciprocal personal relationships. Volunteers help teach self-sufficiency skills to refugees, empowering them to thrive in American society. A weekly Help Center provides refugees a setting where they receive assistance with job applications food stamp applications, and deciphering medical bills, along with a myriad of other services.
